

Do you have overprotective parents?

What can you do if you have overprotective parents?

No, I don't have overprotective parents. They give me the freedom I need. Whenever I have problems, they'll only guide me instead of solving the problem for me. Therefore, I am used to dealing with my own problems.

If I had overprotective parents, I would first try to tell them how I feel about being overprotected. It is of utmost importance to let them know what you want. Only then can they understand what you really require. A lot of us may think it is useless and they simply don't want to listen. However, I think it is the only way of tackling this problem. We also need to understand why they are so protective. They really love us and don't want to see us in trouble.

It is therefore even more important that you treat them kindly. Otherwise they might think you do not appreciate what they do for you and this will break their hearts. Our parents protect us for a reason and we should respect them for that.
