Title: The Tap Water

The Tap Water

On 28th October, 2008, some volunteers helped an old woman who was eight-three years old to build an aqueduct. They used four hours to build that aqueduct on a sunny day. When the old woman turned on the tap, water passed through the new aqueduct that was 150 metre long. The old woman was very glad because it was her first time to use tap water. The media asked the volunteers why they helped the old woman. You would not earn any money but why you still helped her. The volunteer answered that because she was old. She has not enough power to get water from the well. Also, she had no money to build the aqueduct, so she needed our help. If we did not help her, no one would help her. That is the end of the story.

I have learnt that helping people will make them happy. It will be heartwarming. We only need to pay some time or money but we can make the poor feel that they are respected by others and may even change their lives. Or someday when you need help, they will help you. The most important thing that I have learnt is good people help people without conditions. Good deeds make people happy. Angels help people who are helpless, so do not be selfish. Be an angel!
