Mrs. Smith is a 55-year-old lady of average height and a bit chubby. She is going to retire next month after teaching in our school for 30 years.

Mrs. Smith was a demanding teacher who gave us lot of homework and her lessons always overran. Moreover, she was understanding and patient. If she thought we had too much homework, she would postpone the deadline of the homework. Although she often gave lots of homework, she would spend time explaining how we should do it until we all understood. Her lessons were fun, and nobody ever got bored in them. She used a lot of analogy to explain some difficult grammar concepts.

Although my English result is not the best in my class, Mrs. Smith said I was one of her favorite students. My English used to be very bad, but she spent time giving me exercises and telling me how I could improve it. She is a very devoted teacher. I saw her eating and marking our homework at the same time. She just tried to give us back our homework as soon as possible.

Mrs. Smith was always kind and patient, and we all have a lot of respect for her.
