

My favourite idol

Sam Tung Kong Hing (3D)

I am an enthusiastic basketball fan, so it's easy to figure out what kind of idol I like – a basketball player, of course! My favourite idol is an Asian basketball player called Jeremy Lin.

Jeremy Lin was born into a Taiwanese family in America. He had a dream like every basketball lover when he was young – to become an NBA star. Not everyone can do this. At first he could not join the NBA. The Houston Rockets and Golden State Warriors waived him. Then the New York Knicks gave him a short-term contract. During this time the best player of Knicks, Carmelo Anthony was hurt, so Jeremy Lin got his first chance. He became the starting point guard and played seven games. He made the best of this opportunity and got over 27.3 points every game! One of the games was New York Knicks vs. Los Angeles Lakers. The Lakers had Kobe Bryant, the best player of the NBA, but Jeremy Lin got 37 points from him. From then on, every American knew who Jeremy Lin was.

He may not be the best NBA player, but he is still my favourite player and my idol because he inspires me. He has taught me that when you get a chance to prove yourself you must grab it with both hands.
