

My Dream Job

6A Iris Kwok

My dream job is to be a teacher. When I first came into contact with English, I was very interested in it. In the past, I liked my English teachers very much. Whenever I had an English lesson, I would listen to the teacher carefully. I tried my best to get full marks in English dictations and a good score in English exams. I like every English teacher who have taught me, and they all have their unique styles. Whenever I have questions, they will answer me with patience. Because of my experiences, I think being an English teacher is a sacred profession.

In my opinion, it is difficult to be a teacher. One needs to have profound knowledge and education. Moreover, one needs to know how to help and teach students. Also, it is important to know how to manage students with different personalities. However, I think this is a very meaningful job. Accompanying students to grow up, watching them become mature, as well as gaining students' recognition and support are the greatest pleasures from this job. Teachers can impart knowledge and cultivate students to establish correct values.

It's a challenging job for me because my English is not so good. That's what bothers me most right now but I believe I can change it if I work hard. I need to make a greater effort to improve my English --- do more English exercises and listen to some more recordings of English. With tremendous effort and determination, I believe I can withstand the pressure and achieve my goal.

On the whole, I think the advantages of being an English teacher outweigh its disadvantages. While teaching others, I can find my own shortcomings and improve them. I will try my best to achieve my dream and not to give up. I remember that once I was absent from school and then the next day, my English teacher helped me with my homework and taught me about the materials of the previous lesson. This inspired me a lot, so I decided to become an English teacher. I hope I can be a professional teacher like Miss Mui.

I hope my dream will come true. I will put more effort into studying English.
