

Review of Charlie's Choice

5D Sam

I think the story of Charlie's Choice is very interesting. It follows a typical structure. The beginning of the story shows a clear picture of the main character, Charlie – he is sitting at the piano and ready to play. From this, we can know that Charlie is a music lover. And the story goes on to portray that music is Charlie's life.

Next comes the build-up – Charlie, the story's protagonist, is now facing a very thorny problem – two women like him, and he can only choose one of them morally. The two women have their own characteristics. One of them is a music lover like Charlie. Her voice is as beautiful as a silver bell, but she is really poor. The other one is not interested in music at all, but she is very rich.

Charlie can only choose one of them, which is a very difficult decision. The poor lady has no other sparkle but the same hobby as his. Being different from the poor woman who can only give Charlie spiritual dependence, the rich woman can give Charlie all the things that money can get. For example, she could help Charlie to continue with his music career with more resources and achievements. So, with her support, it would be smooth sailing in his music career, even if she doesn't like music.

One event of the story is that Charlie visits his teacher, Maestro Giovanni, for advice on making his decision. His teacher suggests that he thinks about what he can't live without so as to make the right choice. Finally, Charlie chooses the rich woman.

As a reader, I don't think the beginning of the story is rich enough. We only know that Charlie loves music, but we don't know about his character, family background and the factors that drive him to music. So, if I were the writer, I would add the details given above to make readers understand Charlie and the storyline better.

Moreover, if I were the author, I would change the ending of the story. I think it's wrong to value money too much and put it as the first choice. I don't think it's easy to find someone who loves you and has the same hobby as you. So if I met such a person, I would not hesitate to choose her. Money can be obtained through our efforts, and it will not be very difficult to get enough money for our living. But if we choose money and miss the right person, it will be a regret for a lifetime. Also, living with a wrong person will only lead to more differences, not real happiness.

We will probably encounter a problem similar to Charlie's in our daily life. I hope that before you make a choice, you ask yourself what is really important to you, and follow your heart to make the decision. In this way, you are less likely to regret making a wrong choice and suffering the consequences.
