

A Day in The Farm

Last Saturday, the members of the Science Society went to visit the Kadoorie Farm in the New Territories.

My teammates are Lisa and Rita. I picked a huge pumpkin from the Farm to bring home. 'Oh wow. This pumpkin is huge and very heavy!' I said. My other teammates, Lisa and Rita, were picking tomatoes. 'These tomatoes are so fresh!' Lisa said.

After we put our vegetables into our bags, we came across some animals. We saw a goat, two ducks, a cow, two rabbits and two cute pigs. 'One of the cute pigs is rolling on the ground,' Rita said. Lisa answered back by smiling. We took some funny photos and even got the chance to feed some of the animals.

After our close contact with the animals, we had a talk about 'Don't waste food!' and protecting the earth. What I learnt from this talk is that we should not cook too much food. If you are not going to eat some food, don't waste it because some people don't have any food to eat and you should be grateful that you have food to eat. I also learnt that we should stop using too much plastic as this will endanger our animals and marine animals. We can try to replace plastic bags with reusable ones when we go shopping.

At last, we got to eat after a fun day. There was a wide variety of yummy food at the lunch buffet. All the foods were fresh, organic and so delicious. I went twice to refill my plate. Lisa and Rita ate a lot of fruits. 'The fruits are so ripe and juicy!' said Rita. We all said, 'I agree!'

We really had a fun and unforgettable day at the Farm.
