

Good people, good deeds

Last week I met a kind stranger who helped me to solve a problem. It was pouring rain and the sky was dark. I tried to find my wallet when I was about to get out of a taxi, but I suddenly remembered that I had put the wallet on the table and I didn't bring it along. I felt very anxious. I tried to decide how to tell the driver what had happened and wondered if he would accept my excuse.

After telling him what had happened, the taxi driver looked at me and said, 'It's OK! No big deal!' I was very grateful for the taxi driver's kindness.

The next day, I kept thinking about him and I felt he looked very familiar. Then I remembered where I had met him before. I saw him shout at pedestrians for help, but no one stopped. I immediately went over to ask what happened knowing that the taxi driver needed help. At that time, I was shocked to hear that a car drove away after it hit someone. I felt very angry and sad. We took the injured old man to the hospital.

I told the whole story to the police and the taxi driver told them the license plate number of the car. They said to us, 'Well done for being such caring and responsible citizens!' We felt very grateful and happy that we could help someone.

After these experiences, I know that good people will be rewarded for their good deeds.
