Compo (2) – A Letter of Advice

Dear Winnie,

How are you doing? I understand all the things you are going through, like how you want to drop out of school and pursue your dream as a pop singer but sadly your parents do not let you. However, I am sorry to say they are right. You cannot just abandon your studies like that. Luckily, I have a few tips that are useful to rectify your problems.

First of all, you should try to understand the situation from your parents' points of view. The most obvious reason why your parents do not want you to drop out of school is that they are worried it may be a big mistake. You should know that it is not easy to succeed in the show business. There is also a rare chance for you to become famous, as you have to be lucky to stand out from the crowd.

Second, you still have to stay in school and focus on your studies. Even though you want to be a pop singer, you still need to have qualifications. Lots of pop stars are well-educated with a university degree. For example, Bing Crosby, who is an all-time famous American actor and singer in the 20th century, graduated from Harvard University with a degree for acting.

On the bright side, I think it would be better to help your parents understand your dream. You should throw the ideas of dropping out of school into rubbish bin, and show your parents that you are focused on accomplishing your goals.

In conclusion, you should not give up school and keep working hard. Even though you may think your parents are being pessimistic, in reality, they just do not want you to go the wrong path in life. I hope that you can find my advice useful. Write back to me soon.

Best,

Suvan
