

Thrills and Wonders: A Day at Ocean Park

Have you been Ocean Park recently? It is a theme park that has always made me feel nostalgic as it holds my childhood memories. During this weekend, I have spent the whole day at Ocean Park with my cousin, Chris. As a thrill-seeker, Ocean Park always gives me excitement and unique experiences.

In the morning, we went to the themed area at the waterfront, the Amazing Asian Animals, feature the rarest Asian animals. The most impressive moment was seeing the giant pandas Ying Ying and Le Le lazily munching on bamboo, climbing the trees in the Panda Village. The highlight of the morning was definitely the Grand Aquarium! We were surrounded by the silent blue world with the beautiful stream of shimmer fish while listening to the soothing music, which allowed us to immerse in tranquility and embrace inner peace. Seeing these adorable endangered animals, it reminded us the wonders of the natural world. Could you believe how alarming the situation is? Those rarest Asian animals in the Ocean Park, including giant pandas and red pandas, are facing a lot of dangers in their natural habitats. I bet you all know that it is due to human activities, such as air pollution caused by industries, hunting and removing trees in their habitats. Chris and I have realized the acute problems of these animals after walking through the Amazing Asiana Animals, as there were some education messages around the area.

After immersing in the natural world, we went on the iconic cable car. Despite the fact that there was an extremely long queue for the cable cars, it was still worth waiting. As we dangled high above the cliffs, we enjoyed the spectacular view of Aberdeen and the outlying islands. What sprang to my mind that moment was that Christ was afraid of heights when he was a child. This 10-min journey has captured our journey to adulthood! It was just like a life journey as Chris has got rid of his fear of heights since he grew up.

Once we reached the Thrill Mountain, it changed to a dynamic and energetic atmosphere. The Hair Raiser was definitely a must-do ride! It was a truly fast, wild and exciting experience! We were raised 50 metres above the sea level before being dropped towards the Earth! We could feel our hair stand on end. Another roller coaster that was worth trying was the Flash. This ride threw us into steep drops and wild twists, so we were screaming all the time! Our day ended with the Arctic Blast. It was less intensive than the other two rides. If you are not brave enough, this ride is for you!

Would I go to Ocean Park again! It is an absolutely yes! The thrilling rides and the stunning natural world of the Ocean Park never gets old! Over the years, Ocean Park still holds a place in my heart. What is your favourite rides in the Ocean Park! Comment down below and stay tuned for my next blog!
