Good people good deeds

Diana, Princess of Wales was a member of the British royal family. She was only 36 years old when she tragically passed away in a violent car-crash. During her time, she focused on humanitarian causes. She helped the homeless by providing food, helped raise funds for children's charities and led a worldwide effort to remove abandoned land mines. She earned the title as "The People's Princess" for her direct work and by breaking royal protocol.

Princess Diana recognised the importance of kindness due to her own personal experiences with emotional isolation and the pressures of royal life. A person who exemplifies Princess Diana's kindness is my mother. My mother has always been a welcoming and kind soul. She always tries her best to help others however she can. She also advocates for mental health, having experienced her own struggles when she was my age. I see similarities in them and how they both choose to help those in need.

The princess' legacy has not been forgotten by the nation. Her compassionate humanitarian work has inspired people worldwide to care and help those in need. Her sons Prince William and Harry have continued to support the homeless and established charities such as 'The Diana Award' to recognize youth people for their humanitarian work.

The Diana Award has helped young individuals to foster positive and supportive development, making them welcoming and helpful to one another. This has significantly made a more inclusive and inspiring environment for the community to get involved.

In conclusion, Princess Diana's act of kindness has strongly impacted those in need and the nation worldwide. Acts of kindness can encourage you and others to repeat the good deeds, contributing to a more positive community. Let's spark kindness!
